

Daniel Hauben (eight-time BRIO winner for painting) has his work on view at the Bronx's Freeman Street subway station (on the 2/5 line) as part of his MTA Arts-for-Transit commission. The images are all based on Mr. Hauben's paintings of the Bronx and each includes elements of the elevated trains. His faceted glass images include (top to bottom) Yankee Stadium, Westchester Square, a barber shop, and a mango vendor can be viewed on both the uptown and downtown sides of the station. To learn more about Daniel and his art, visit www.artwing.com. (June 2006).